That the act complained of was one which would never be countenanced by the British Government, and redress would doubtless be rendered: He said that there was the greatest meet of a force upon the frontier to keep-the perce, and prevent acts of retaliation in the present excited state of feeling upon that Boniler The government had been guitty of culpable negligence for not having moved in this matter before. This state of feeling had been growing up for a month and more, and the government ought to have foreseen and provid ed against the existing crisis

The remarks of Mr. Menefee which follow, are reported by the Correspondent of the Boston Atlas. They commend themselves to the reader by the calm, dispassionate and dignified manner in which they dispose of the subject

He said, the act of those who destroyed the Carobne had not been avowed by the British authority it was thus far merely an inclusite state of things, and it was incumbent on that House to set to the country an example of mod eration, and of a statesman like minner of viewing and of discussing a topic on which so much excitement and unfortunately been already manifested -He regretted to hear sentiments advanced and d sincitions made lives, which were eclaulated to have, on the people of the United States, on influence of the worst kind It was to be presumed, us a thing of course that this nation would vindicate, at ail times, its own rights, and those of every one of its citizens, but he was opposed to utlering bravadoes beforehand as to while decids of daring we would do in the way of vengeance and harlings manifested in this Illiuse wife calculated to give tone to public feeling generally be must protest against the introduction, at this stake, no right of search, no question of thick torcement of this act ade, none of those great and essential questions of international policy or rights which might justify a resort to force, and he should be ut terly unwilling to see two countries like Great Britain and the United States precipitated into a war by the excited pressions of men acting without the authority of either Government But he had no such fears. We were going to have no war with England, and it unight be as well to proclaim it now as at any other time The remotest lears of such an issue wefe, in this view, perfectly preposterous, it was not to be thought of Gentlemen seemed to forget who Great Britain and the United States were in the scale of nations They forget that a resort to war was now growing unfashionable, and that nations were beginning to regulate their intercourse. and to settle their occasional differences on grander principles than those of mere physical and relative force the noble principles of civil liberty, justice, and the advance of civilization it would be to make war on the spirit of the uge, if, by a sort of legislative madness, gentleme A hould tristet on precipitating us into 8 ha tional contest for matters like the present But they never could do it, they could not force a war between two such nations, standing as they did, soward-the rest of the world, unless they could first roll back the spirit of the age. These mations had, it is true fought against each other, but even in the midst of their contest, there were stril so many kindred principles in the bosoms of both, as to triumph over their temporary hostility, and unite them as friends of human freedom and the civilization of the species Why then, would gentlemen, under an imper-fect and doubtful state of information, on grounds of acknowledged passions, rather than After califical consideration, insist upon put ting their country in a false position?

But, Mr M. went on to observe, there had Whin a serum much deeper than the sergure of the Steam-heat Caroline, to produce the existing state of excitement among our people. The direction, forced on the country the difficulties under which it we now deboring Me. M. now bile, here in his place, and the

The book comes at a very low price and has been adopted in a great many Schools with decided approbation, and having been sterentyped, is free from the danger of having any altergious made in it, which is the greatest fromthe with all remain hooks
